there was a time in Czechoslovakia where denim was something of a rarity. something that my parents could only dream of. what was casual workwear in the US, was for the lucky few where I grew up. not for me. I hated denim growing up, and that is why I chose to work with it. new challenge. I ended up studying the structure of denim as an expensive material and how to simulate it in knitwear using a stitch I developed with Stoll machine systems. I had escaped from reality, into the fantasy of my illustrated imaginary world and suddenly I appeared back in the Soviet-style suburbs of Prague. it reminded me how much I enjoyed being present this reality. the roughness, simplicity of living, going for a beer in same sweatpants to the same bar every day. smoking weed, complaining about the future. nothing has changed... and I like my reality. the good, the bad, and the ugly. finally, I accepted this is my culture. it appears in the hand-painted, stitched, written details, a photo of the wall in my mum's bedroom, old-school romance blended with new era street kid. this collection is a mix of different approaches and styles. it's the chaotic lifestyle of my hometown vs living abroad where I used to feel like stealing someone else's identity. imperfection and authenticity that helps me to step out of the uncool greyness.
